Default risk, as measured by EDFs, often varies considerably among bonds that otherwise appear to be very similar.

How Low Can You Go?

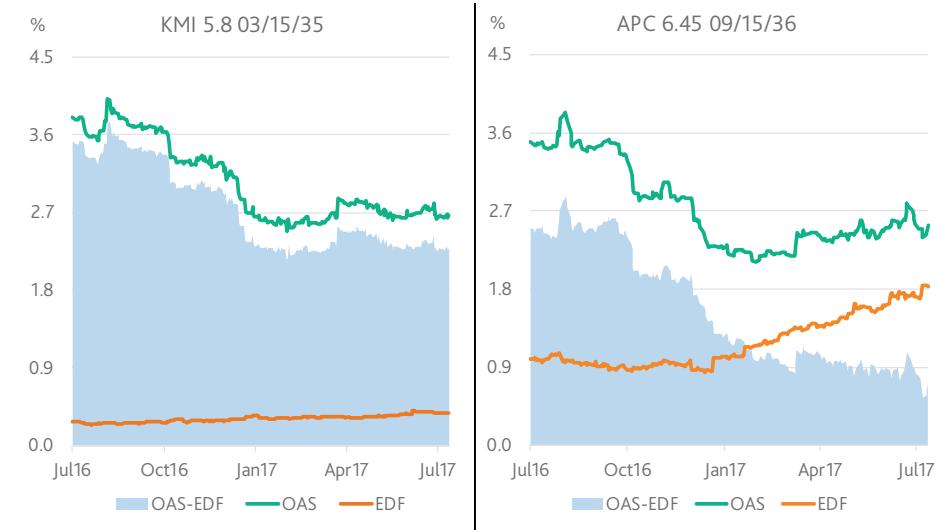

Using CreditEdge to Search for Yield in the US Corporate Bond Market

Bottom-fishing — but with confidence

These are challenging times for corporate bond fund managers, to put it mildly. Expenses are up, management fees are down, and yields haven't been this depressed since the 1940s. Such trends are driving investment firms ever further afield in the search for assets that meet their clients' return and yield targets – and that are commensurate with fees typical for active managers. "Going low" — buying lower credit quality, and thus higher yielding, assets — is an obvious way to do this. Yet moving down the credit quality spectrum carries greater risks of downgrade and default, something that poses special challenges for managers entering riskier areas for the first time. Expected Default Frequency (EDF™) probability of default metrics, contained in Moody's Analytics' CreditEdge platform, are a way for them to take on greater credit risk with confidence, by providing granular, forward-looking views of default and downgrade risk, and by identifying undervalued securities. CreditEdge metrics also promote operational efficiencies by helping to streamline managers' existing asset selection and portfolio surveillance routines.

Default risk, as measured by security-level EDFs, often varies considerably among bonds that otherwise appear to be very similar. Two issues from companies in the US energy sector, one from Kinder Morgan and the other from Anadarko Petroleum, provide a good example of this. Both are rated Baa3 by Moody's Investors Service, have 18-19 years to maturity, and option-adjusted spreads of around 300 bp. Yet the average annualized EDF on the Kinder issue is only 0.39%, while that for the Anadarko bond is 1.73% (Figure 1).

A bond's credit spread compensates the holder for a raft of unpleasant issue characteristics, ranging from default risk to illiquidity. So having the majority of the premium consumed by default risk, as is the case for the ARC issue shown on the previous page, is obviously a bad thing, one that doesn't bode well for future performance.

An investor's expected default-related loss on a bond has to be adjusted for an estimate of the loss-given default, of course. Thus, for most issues, i.e., those with LGDs of less than 100%, estimated default-related losses will be less than those suggested by the issues' PDs alone. But this doesn't change the basic point that holding bonds with high EDFs in relation to their spreads or yields could well have negative effects on future portfolio performance.

Within the same rating category on average, low EDF issues outperform high EDF issues, usually by a considerable margin, and have much lower downgrade/upgrade ratios and default rates.

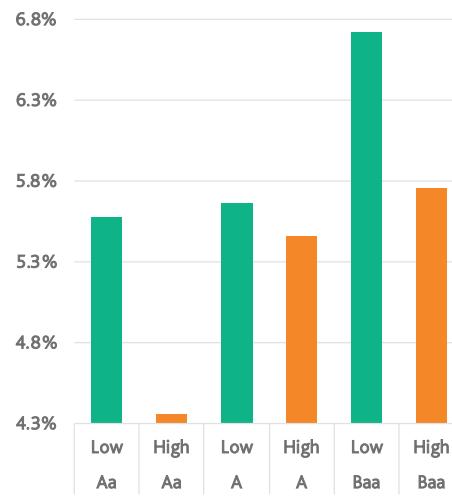

Bonds with low EDF measures tend to outperform those with elevated metrics

We have tested this intuitive conclusion by comparing the total returns of issues sold by entities with relatively low and relatively high firm-level EDFs, and thus with relatively low and relatively high EDFs assigned to their bonds.¹ As we show below, within the same rating category on average low EDF issues outperform high EDF issues, usually by a considerable margin, and have much lower downgrade/upgrade ratios and default rates (the latter only for high yield).

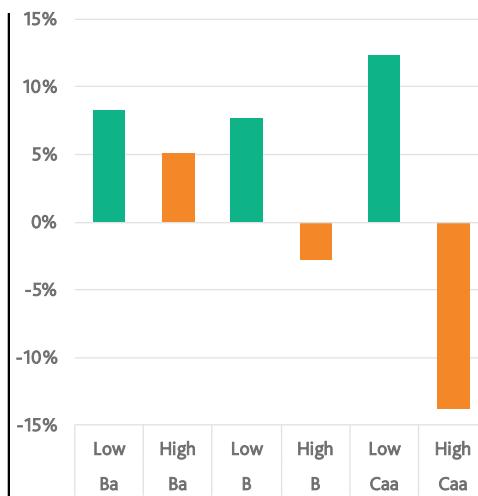

Our study covers the US investment grade and high yield markets for 2006–March 2017, and encompasses bonds with CreditEdge metrics that meet the inclusion rules for the iBoxx liquid benchmarks.² At the outset of the period we divided the issues based on their Moody's Investors Service ratings and rank-ordered them by their entity-level EDF metrics. We selected the bonds issued by entities in the lowest EDF quintile and those in the highest EDF quintile. We calculated their monthly total returns and annualized the results. We limited turnover by only re-ranking the issues twice a year, and charged transaction costs of 50 bp. The results are shown in Figures 2a (for investment grade) and 2b (for high yield).

Figures 2a and 2b: Average annualized total returns for low and high EDF issues (2006–2017)

2a. Investment Grade

2b. High Yield

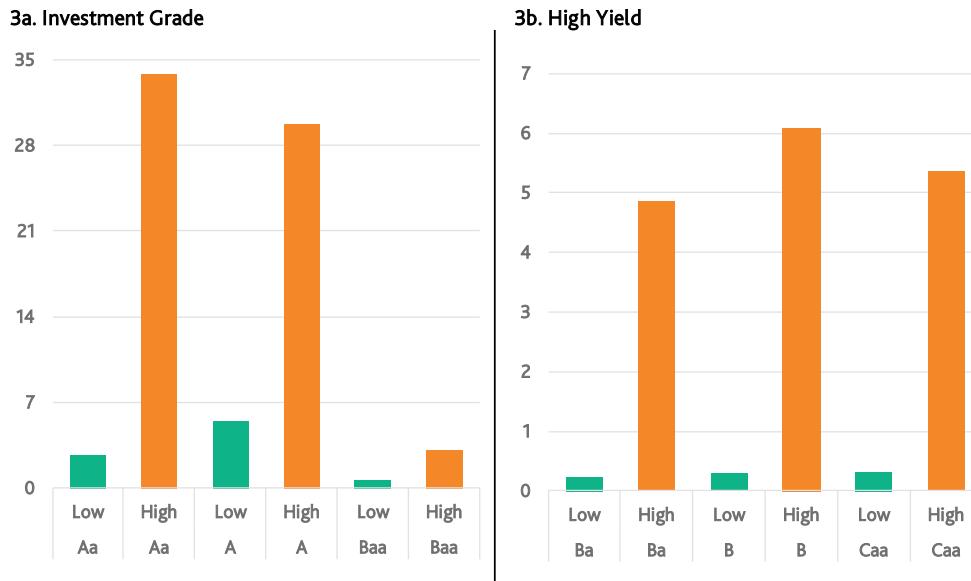

Moreover, the better return characteristics for the low EDF portfolios were achieved with a significantly reduced risk of downgrade by Moody's Investors Service (Figures 3a and 3b, for investment grade and high yield).

¹ As most readers will be aware, CreditEdge contains term structures of EDF measures for around 42,000 entities, updated daily, calculated on a cumulative and on an average annualized basis. We map firm-level EDF measures to bond-level metrics by first determining the duration for each issue and then taking the EDF measure from the appropriate point in the term structure and applying it to the issue.

² We will publish a white paper with full description of the study in the near future.

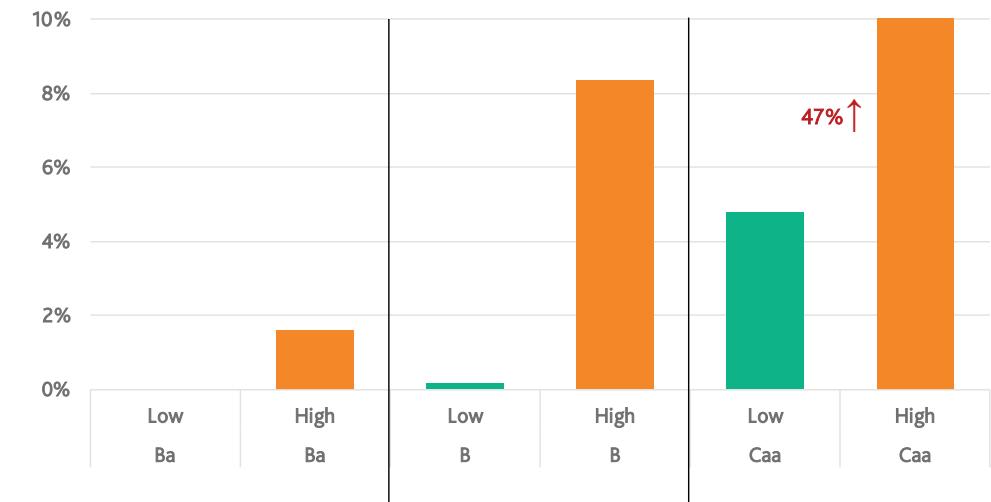

The better return characteristics for the low EDF portfolios were achieved with a significantly reduced risk of downgrade.

Figures 3a and 3b: Average annualized downgrade/upgrade ratios for US investment grade and high yield issues sold by low and high EDF entities

Finally, as readers would expect, within the speculative grade market the default rate on bonds issued by companies with low EDF metrics is much less than that for issues sold by entities with elevated EDFs (Figure 4).

Issue-level opportunities

Having confirmed, in a reasonably rigorous way, that it's better to hold bonds with relatively low EDF metrics than bonds that CreditEdge identifies as riskier, we can now turn to picking out issues on which investors can focus.

Our starting point is same sample of issues that underlie the foregoing study, namely those that meet the eligibility criteria for the iBoxx Liquid Investment Grade and High Yield Indices. A check of TRACE trade records show that over a given 30-day period most of the securities trade in institutional lot sizes, although the number of reported trades per issue varies considerably.

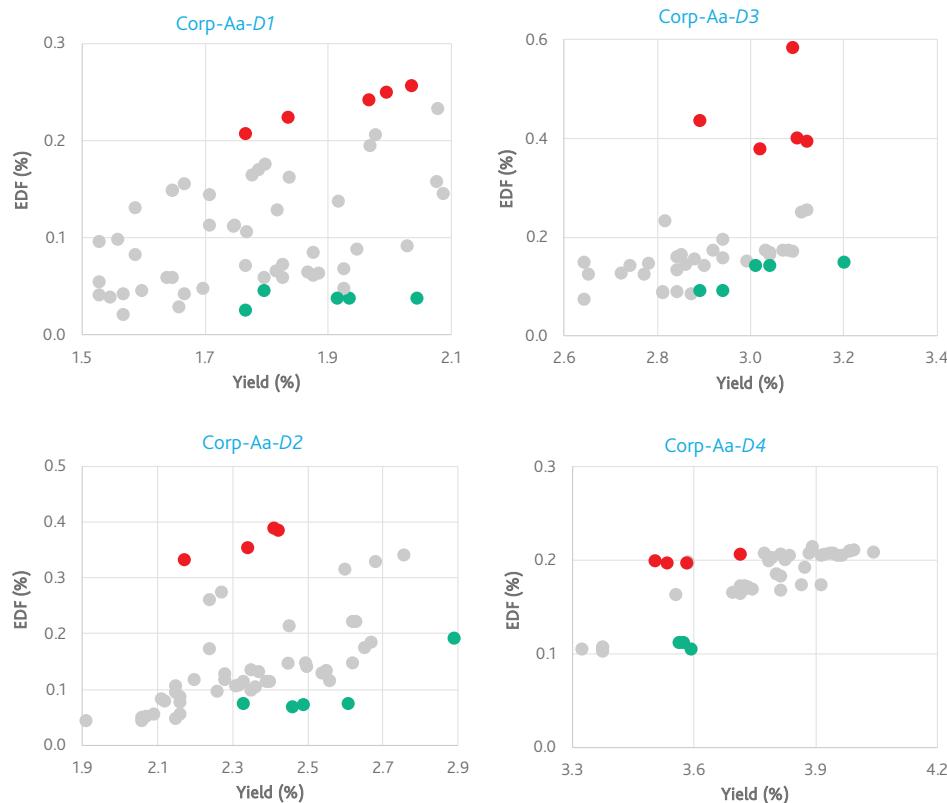

We divided the issues by broad rating category, sector (industrial/utility) and duration bucket³, giving us 24 groupings for investment grade and 12 for high yield (for the latter we don't separate industrial/utility issuers from financial institutions). To illustrate better the value — or lack thereof — per bond, we constructed scatter plots of the issues, with yields on one axis and average annualized EDFs on the other. Finally, for each bucket we identified five "good" bonds (i.e., with high yields and low EDFs) and five "bad" ones, with the opposite characteristics. Our selection criteria included the number of recorded institutional lot-sized trades in TRACE. Please see the Appendix for the groupings and details of the selected issues. CreditEdge clients can access the full list of bonds via the CreditEdge platform, of course.

So in conclusion...

With the corporate bonds seemingly in a prolonged period of low yields, more fund managers are entering new (for them), and often riskier, parts of the market. CreditEdge metrics can help them surmount the accompanying challenges, while also providing ways to gain operational efficiencies.

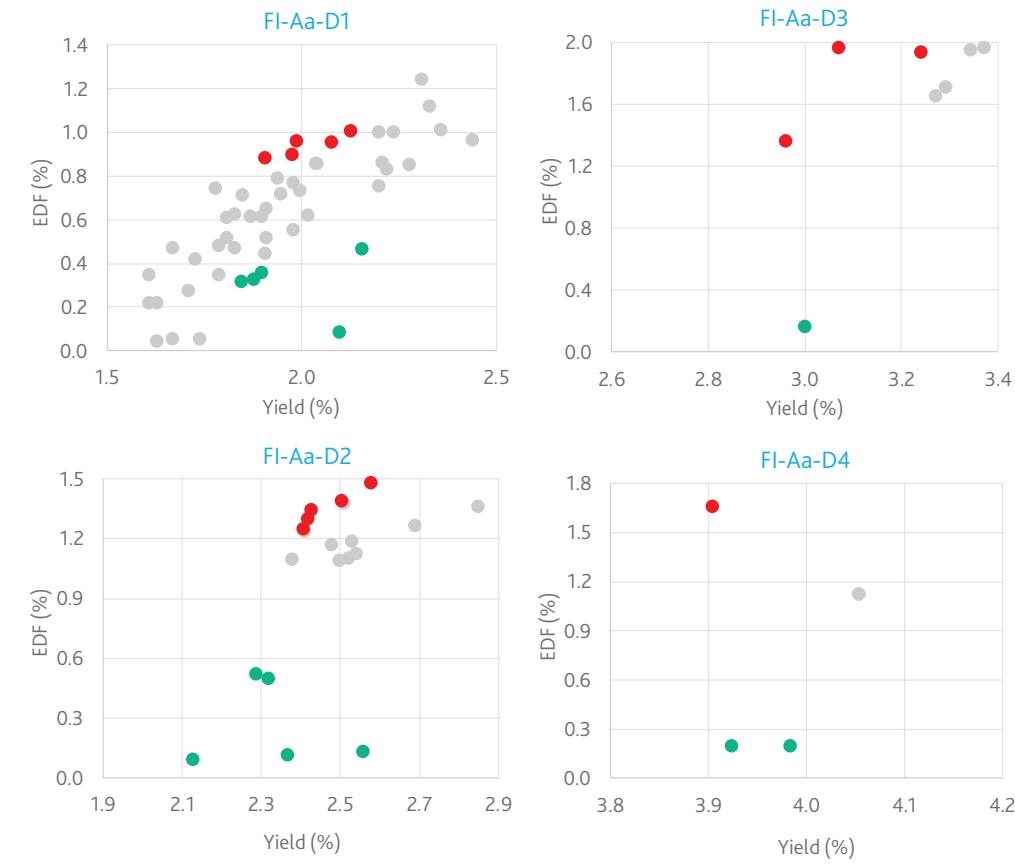

³ Our four duration buckets for each market (measured in years) are, for investment grade D1 <3.4, D2<5.9, D3<11.8, D4>=11.8, and for high yield D1<3.9, D2<4.9, D3<6.1 and D4>=6.1.

MIS, a wholly-owned credit rating agency subsidiary of Moody's Corporation ("MCO"), hereby discloses that most issuers of debt securities (including corporate and municipal bonds, debentures, notes and commercial paper) and preferred stock rated by MIS have, prior to assignment of any rating, agreed to pay to MIS for appraisal and rating services rendered by it fees ranging from $1,500 to approximately $2,500,000. MCO and MIS also maintain policies and procedures to address the independence of MIS's ratings and rating processes. Information regarding certain affiliations that may exist between directors of MCO and rated entities, and between entities who hold ratings from MIS and have also publicly reported to the SEC an ownership interest in MCO of more than 5%, is posted annually at www.moodys.com under the heading "Shareholder Relations — Corporate Governance — Director and Shareholder Affiliation Policy."
